From the stunning Swallowtails to the delicate Painted Ladies, a total of 203 butterfly species have been documented in Kengtung State. Each one with its unique colors, patterns, and behavior, captivating both researchers and nature enthusiasts alike.

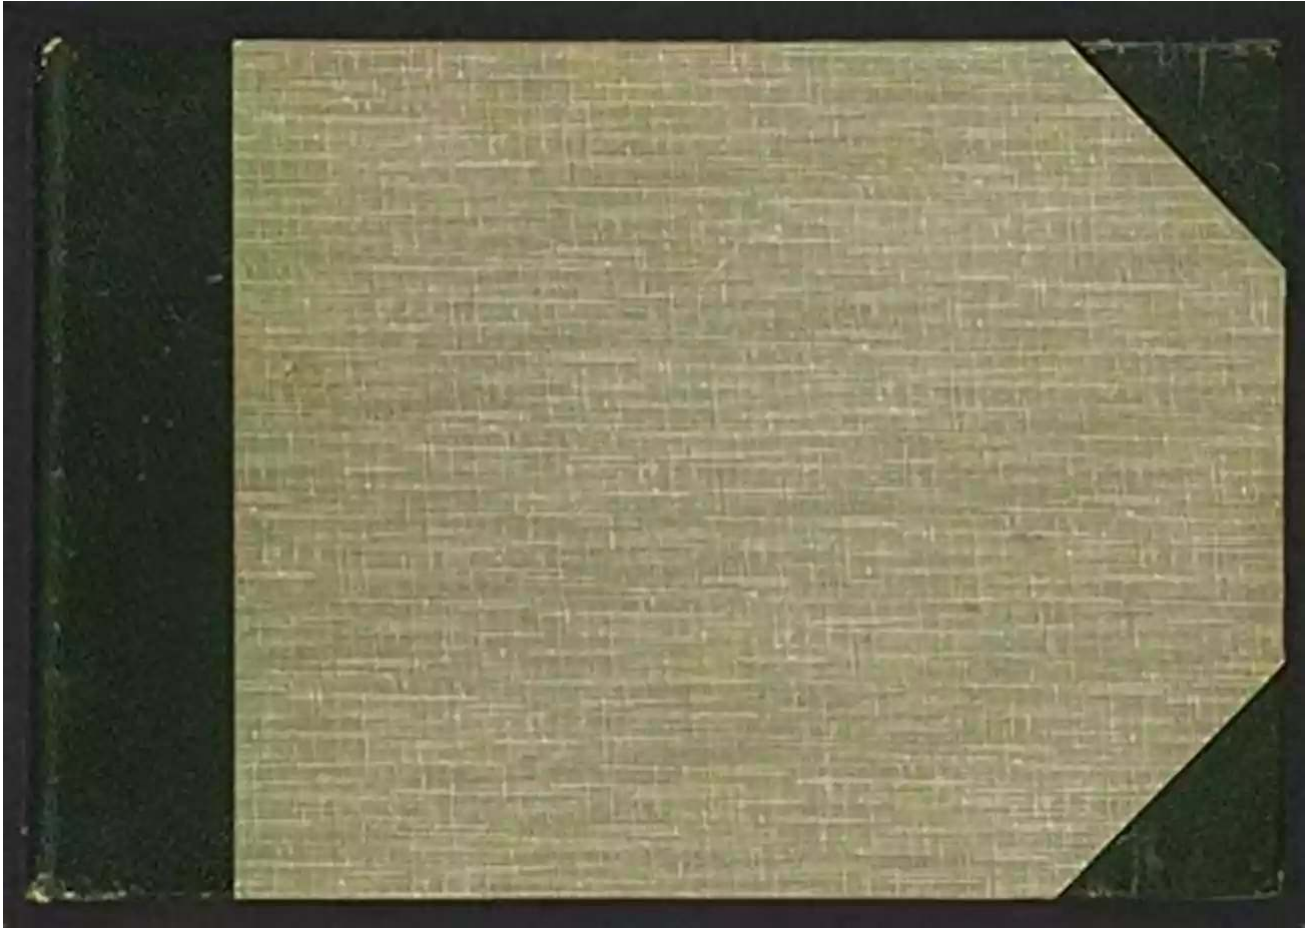

Meet Some of Kengtung State's Most Captivating Butterflies

1. Swallowtail Butterfly (Scientific name: Papilio machaon)

The Swallowtail Butterfly is one of the largest and most recognizable butterfly species in the world. Its wingspan can reach up to 8 inches, and its vivid yellow color with striking black patterns makes it a true sight to behold.

2. Painted Lady Butterfly (Scientific name: Vanessa cardui)

The Painted Lady Butterfly, also known as the Cosmopolitan, is a migratory species found in all continents except Antarctica. With its intricate orange, black, and white patterns, it adds a burst of color wherever it goes.

3. Common Jezebel Butterfly (Scientific name: Delias eucharis)

The Common Jezebel Butterfly is known for its elegant white wings and prominent black markings. This species is often seen fluttering around gardens and parks, adding grace to its surroundings.

The Importance of Butterfly Conservation

While these butterflies are undeniably beautiful, their significance goes beyond aesthetics. Butterflies play a crucial role in the ecosystem as pollinators, helping to facilitate the reproduction of various plant species. Their presence is vital for maintaining the balance of nature.

However, the butterfly populations worldwide are under threat due to habitat loss, climate change, and pollution. Conservation efforts are crucial to ensure that future generations can continue to admire and benefit from these enchanting creatures.

203 butterflies from Kengtung State, Southern Shan States, Burma. Captured and accurately painted by Major/Squadron Leader JGP Drummond MC who, in 1921, was posted to Loimwe and, finding that it was the rainy season AND the close season for shooting, turned his attentions to smaller game... butterflies. Major Drummond wrote a forward to accompany his stunning artwork as well as including copies of some of the correspondence he entered into. A number of the original butterflies are now housed in the London Natural History Museum and at the premises of the Bombay Natural History Society.

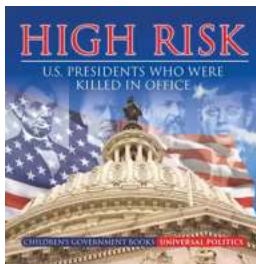

Major Drummond's artwork is second to none. The butterflies must have been painted from observations made through magnifying glass and the originals are all life-size. Many of the identifications were made from these paintings and Major Drummond was the first to publish descriptions of some of his captures. And at least one was the first ever caught.

This book represents a unique record of Burmese butterflies from an area of the Southern Shan States from both a natural history point of view and as objects of art - and this electronic copy has been produced specifically to preserve Major Drummond's tremendous work. It also makes this work available to the world - while the beautifully bound original takes pride of place in the Drummond household.
