However, Judy's life took an extraordinary turn when the HMS Gnat was attacked and eventually sank near the coast of Sumatra in February 1942. After enduring over two days in the ocean, Judy somehow made her way to a deserted island, along with a few surviving sailors. It was on this remote island that Judy's true adventure began.

Judy's Impact on the Prisoners of War

Following their rescue from the deserted island, Judy and the surviving sailors were captured by the Japanese and classified as prisoners of war. They were sent to various labor camps, including the infamous Changi Prison in Singapore.

Throughout their imprisonment, Judy became a symbol of hope and solace for the captured soldiers. Her unwavering loyalty and affection offered them a much-needed reminder of the world they had left behind. She provided a sense of normalcy amidst the harsh realities of war.

Judy was not just a source of emotional support; she also helped her human comrades in practical ways. She would locate fresh water sources, alert the prisoners of approaching guards by barking, and even catch rats to supplement their meager diets.

The Legendary Escape

As the war progressed, Judy and her companions were transferred to a new camp in Medan, Indonesia. It was during a perilous attempt to escape from this camp that Judy's loyalty reached new heights.

One night, while the prisoners were making their escape through dense jungle terrain, Judy managed to locate an underground river filled with crocodiles. Instead of warning the prisoners of the danger and abandoning them, Judy persistently barked, attracting the attention of the guards, and ultimately leading to the recapture of everyone.

In recognition of her extraordinary bravery and service, Judy was awarded the Dickin Medal, also known as the "Animal Victoria Cross," in May 1946. She became the only dog to receive this prestigious honor during the entirety of World War II.

Judy's Later Life and Legacy

Following her acclaim, Judy lived a life of peace and comfort. She settled in England and spent the rest of her days in the company of her devoted human friends. Unfortunately, she passed away in February 1950, leaving behind a legacy of courage and resilience.
