What would you do if you felt you had a dad that was esteemed by the whole neighborhood? Even to the point of being the neighborhood's dad, but you as his child, still felt a void? Or as a mom that you feared challenging your child's father, to be a little more invested, present, and proactive in your child's life? But instead, you felt forced to accept the bare minimum? This book defines the dangers of an unfilled void, and the fear of addressing it. It also breaks down scenarios and describes generational curses and patterns and how they need to be broken immediately. The child never asks to be born nor to be here but tends to suffer from lack of support, quality time, and love. For a daughter, a father is her first date. Her depiction of a man, and how he should be, and treat her. For a son, a father teaches him all elements of boyhood. From toddler to adolescent to manhood, proper male mannerisms, and how to treat a woman from a male perspective. The time that we are given in the beginning, which is crucial, of our children's lives are just the building blocks, and phases of the child that blooms into a proper adulthood, and impacts their own children. This book also goes into the depths of the brokenness of that father played out in a child's life.
