"Stories that are funny and always compelling. Rupert Wolfe Murray is a throwback to an earlier bolder time, like finding Hemingway alive and well on Oxford Street." Chris Stephen, journalist and war reporter

Himalayan Bus Plunge introduces a hyperactive aid worker (the author's brother), a Nepalese brain surgeon who drives like a demon, a guitar-playing guide from Romania, helpful doctors from Iran and Tibet, and a tramp who looks like Saddam Hussein. It also offers a critique of Britain's aid budget (DFID).

Alexander McCall Smith, who wrote the foreword for the author's first travel book, 9 Months in Tibet, said: "He would be a great travelling companion, I suspect, because of his sympathy and his instinctive understanding of those amongst whom he spent time."

Readers' feedback to Himalayan Bus Plunge:

"Your written prose is strong and well crafted. You have a very interesting personal history in the Himalayas and a deeply involved, embedded brother there. This adds rare insight. I came away with a deeper understanding of the region."

Peter Mair, Retired Federal Prosecutor (USA)

A review by author and artist Tim Neat:

"When this Covid-19 Pandemic has been controlled - as it will be - high mountains will mean more-than-ever to all who hold life dear. Great mountain ranges embody energies that convulsed Planet Earth during its formation. Pandemics and war show the fragility of human life but, in cosmic terms, the life of the earth is equally fragile.

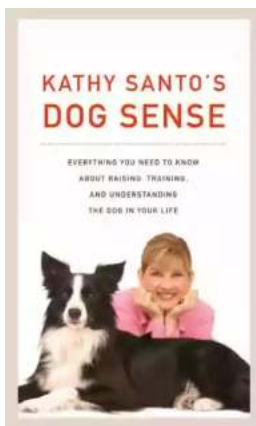

"2020, the year of the Corona virus, also marks the hundredth anniversary of the birth of James Lovelock, creator of the Gaia theory – and this virus and that theory are connected. The Gaian planet is in revolt against the Anthropocene.

"Publication of Rupert Wolfe Murray's book HIMALAYAN BUS PLUNGE can be seen as throwing a light on both. Chaos theory relates how the updraught from the wing of a butterfly in the Amazonian jungle will, in certain circumstances, spiral-up to initiate weather changes that create storms that become hurricanes that can change the very face of the earth. Wolfe Murray's book uses a trip to Nepal as the excuse to very subtly explore experience and raise important thoughts about the great and small issues facing both humanity, and the earth, in our time. To go, or not to go? How to go, what to see? What nurtures, what corrupts, what destroys human being and the natural world? How do we stop humanity abusing itself, and the planet, beyond reason and in the teeth of natural law?

"This book is highly personal but it encourages the reader to think beyond our personal, short-term needs. It is a book for the knapsacks of wanderers – particularly any who keep diaries or document their travels and thoughts. Its footloose strengths, and rockfall stumbles, should encourage all - armchair readers and leather-booted trekkers - to take up the burden of our time: the need to take the step forward, that will lead to steps back from the precipice on which, omnivorous, self-seeking mankind is teetering in its egotistical, solipsistic, cyclopean folly.

"Here's to Gaia - and a Happy Birthday to Sir James Lovelock, a great thinker for our time and the future."
