The "That How Roll" approach encourages positive reinforcement and turns potty training into a game. Each time your child successfully uses the potty, they get to pick a reward from the chart. It can be anything from a small toy, a special treat, or even an outing to their favorite park. The key is to motivate and engage your child, making them eager to use the potty and win those rewards!

But what makes this method truly unique and foolproof is the of a lovable character – Mr. Potty Pants! Mr. Potty Pants is a stuffed animal or doll who becomes your child's potty training partner. Whenever your child needs to go, they bring Mr. Potty Pants with them, making the experience more fun and less intimidating.

Mr. Potty Pants is also a fantastic listener and empathizer. Your child can talk to Mr. Potty Pants about their fears, struggles, and successes. This encourages open communication and provides your child with a supportive companion throughout the potty training journey.

In addition to Mr. Potty Pants, the "That How Roll" method recommends incorporating songs, dances, and storytelling into the potty training routine. These playful elements not only entertain your child but also help them associate positive emotions with using the potty.

Remember, potty training is a process that requires patience and consistency. The "That How Roll" approach encourages setting a routine and sticking to it.

Consistency plays a crucial role in helping your child understand and adapt to this new phase of their life.

Finally, let's address some common concerns. Accidents might occur, and that's perfectly normal. In fact, the "That How Roll" method encourages embracing accidents with laughter and understanding. Accidents are opportunities for learning and growth, not reasons to get frustrated.

Resistance from your child can also happen, but the key is to stay calm and positive. Using the "That How Roll" method, you can gently remind them of the rewards and the fun adventures they can have every time they use the potty successfully.

, potty training doesn't have to be a dreaded and stressful experience for parents or children. With the "That How Roll" hilarious but foolproof take on potty training, you can turn this milestone into a fun and enjoyable journey.
