A journey back in time to an era when urban bus services were not only owned by the people they served, but the vehicles, with their distinctive liveries and local branding, especially the municipal coat of arms, were a great source of civic pride.

Join a whistle-stop tour of every one of the near-100 cities and towns across the United Kingdom who were proud owners of their own municipal bus undertakings in 1960.

Sheer nostalgia for bus anoraks from Aberdeen to Plymouth – and an abject lesson in social history for students of the period.
