The Making Of State And Nation Since 1920 is a comprehensive compilation of essays that meticulously analyze critical aspects of the region's transformation.

Understanding the Historical Context

The Middle East has witnessed several pivotal moments, such as the collapse of the Ottoman Empire, the emergence of nation-states, the Arab-Israeli conflict, and more. These events have had a profound impact on the region's political, economic, and social landscape.

The book explores how the colonial era shaped state and nation-building, as well as the complex aftermath of decolonization. It delves into the struggles faced by various Middle Eastern countries as they sought to assert their independence and establish functioning political systems.

The Role of Identity, Religion, and Ethnicity

Another significant factor explored by "The Making Of State And Nation Since 1920" is the role of identity, religion, and ethnicity in the Middle East. The authors delve into how these aspects have influenced state-nation relations, societal cohesion, and political stability.

The book showcases the intricate interactions between sectarian divides, ethnic tensions, and national identities. By understanding these dynamics, readers can gain profound insights into the region's complexities and the challenges faced by its numerous ethnic and religious groups.

Geopolitical Realities and External Influences

The Middle East has long been at the center of global attention due to its vital geopolitical position and rich oil reserves. As such, external powers have often exerted significant influence on the region's political and economic systems.

"The Making Of State And Nation Since 1920" examines the role played by major powers, such as the United States, in shaping Middle Eastern countries' sociopolitical fabric. It sheds light on how external interventions have impacted state-building efforts, inter-state relations, and the regional balance of power.

The Contemporary Middle East

In the final part of the book, "The Making Of State And Nation Since 1920" discusses the contemporary challenges facing the Middle East. It examines the rise of non-state actors, the threat of terrorism, economic disparities, and the quest for democracy in the region.

By offering a comprehensive overview of the state and nation-building processes in the Middle East since 1920, this book equips readers with knowledge necessary to comprehend the region's current dynamics.

"The Making Of State And Nation Since 1920 Routledge Studies In Middle Eastern" provides an essential resource for anyone seeking to understand the historical, political, and social developments that have shaped the Middle East. This book links sectarianism in Iraq to the failure of the modern nation-state to resolve tensions between sectarian identities and concepts of unified statehood and uniform citizenry.

After a theoretical excursus that recasts the notion of primordial identity as a socially constructed reality, the author sets out to explain the persistence of sectarian affiliations in Iraq since its creation following the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire. Despite the adoption of homogenizing state policies, the uneven sectarian composition of the ruling elites nurtured feelings of political exclusion among marginalized sectarian groups, the Shi^cites before 2003 and the Sunnis in the post-2003 period. The book then examines how communal discourses in the educational curriculum provoked masked forms of resistance that sharpened sectarian consciousness. Tracing how the anti-Persian streak in the nation-state's Pan-Arab ideology, which camouflaged anti-Shi^cism, undermined Iraq's national integration project, Sectarianism in Iraq delves into the country's slide from a totalizing Pan-Arab ideology in the pre-2003 period toward the atomistic impulse of the federalist debate in the post-2003 period.

Employing extensive fieldwork, this book sheds light on the dynamics of political life in post-Saddam Iraq and is essential reading for Iraqi and Middle East specialists, as well as those interested in understanding the current heightening of sectarian Sunni-Shi'ite tensions in the Middle East.
