Washington Irving came to Oklahoma from Sleepy Hollow in 1832. Autumn was perfect that year. There were days with a “pure transparent atmosphere that seemed to bathe the very heart with gladness,” sunsets of a clear apple green, and calm beautiful nights. Even experiences with fire and water were nothing more than counter notes to all the perfection. Washington Irving, author from Sleepy Hollow, enjoyed a month long Tour in Oklahoma; went back to New York and wrote A Tour on the Prairies. The prairies, hardwood forests, and Cross Timbers are diminished, but still here. The Muscogee Creeks and the Osages are still here; now our friends and neighbors; our teachers and preachers; our doctors and lawyers. You can follow Irving’s Tour using A Tour on the Oklahoma Prairies
