The Journey Begins: Discovering Poland's Cultural Tapestry

Linda Lee Keenan's journey to Poland began with an insatiable curiosity to explore the depths of its culture and history. Her first stop was the cultural capital, Krakow. As she walked through the cobblestone streets, Keenan found herself captivated by the architectural marvels that whispered stories of the past. The Royal Castle, with its Gothic spires piercing the sky, and the mesmerizing Wawel Cathedral, filled her with a sense of awe, urging her to capture their beauty in her artwork.

Not limited to the bustling cities, Keenan ventured into the heart of Poland's countryside, immersing herself in the rural charm. From the peaceful landscapes of Mazury, with its picturesque lakes and lush greenery, to the quaint villages of Podhale, nestled amidst the majestic Tatra Mountains, Keenan discovered a world untouched by time. Her brushstrokes transformed those serene vistas into breathtaking works of art, capturing the essence of Poland's natural treasures.

Tracing History: Uncovering Poland's Pain and Resilience

In her quest to understand the soul of Poland, Linda Lee Keenan explored its tumultuous history, often marked by pain and resilience. She visited poignant sites, such as the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp, where the horrors of the Holocaust unfolded. Keenan faced the weight of history on her shoulders as she walked through the remnants, paying homage to the lives lost. In her art, she conveyed the message of remembrance and the importance of learning from the past to create a brighter future.

Warsaw, the capital city, also played a significant role in Keenan's journey. Delving into its tumultuous past, she chronicled the city's harrowing experiences during World War II and subsequent rejuvenation. The iconic Warsaw Uprising Monument served as a reminder of Poland's indomitable spirit and unwavering determination to rebuild. Keenan's artwork captured the essence of resilience, showcasing how history has shaped the nation's identity.

The Polish Soul: Celebrating Tradition and Folklore

Linda Lee Keenan's exploration of Poland would have been incomplete without diving into its rich tapestry of traditions and folklore. She traveled to remote villages, where age-old practices and customs were still devoutly cherished. From vibrant regional costumes and exquisite folk dances to intricately crafted wooden sculptures, Keenan marveled at the beauty of Poland's cultural heritage. Her artwork vividly brought to life the essence of these traditions, paying homage to the generations that have preserved them.

The art of traditional Polish paper cutting, known as Wycinanki, became a significant inspiration for Keenan. The delicate precision of each cut, intricately depicting motifs from nature and folklore, mesmerized her. With skilled hands and a heart filled with admiration, Keenan blended this traditional craft with her modern artistic style, creating captivating masterpieces that bridged the gap between the old and the new.

When the Nazi's invaded Poland at the beginning of World War II, they overtook Cracow's beloved Wawel Castle. It had been the center of town life for more than 600 years. Suddenly, it was the seat of Hitler's General Government.

The citizens were in mortal danger. Bravely, they took the situation in hand and formed an underground resistance group named after their town park, Acorn Park.

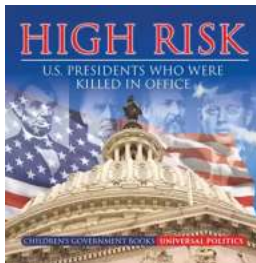

They began having secret meetings in the basement of a church. They planned and dreamed up ways to outsmart the Nazi's. They would have to be very clever if they were to get their family and friends out of Poland before their operation was discovered by the enemy. Time was not in their favor.

Their success depended on whether they could raise funds, find temporary hiding places, figure out their transportation and connect with the few who had already escaped.
