This story is a delightful peek into the unique relationship between a very wise and insightful young boy and his adoring grandparents.

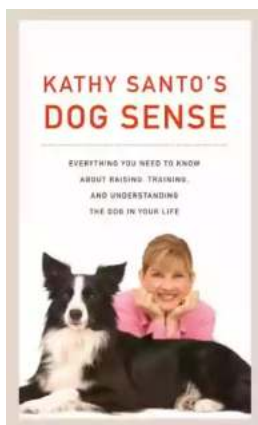

This book revolves around the precociousness of an 11-year-old swami.

It appears the child is an old soul, with the wisdom of Gandhi and the wit of Don Rickles. It's all done during Quiet Time spent in the hot tub with his grandparents. Obviously well-read, how he comes up with stuff is beyond my expertise.

Reincarnation? Telepathy? ESP?

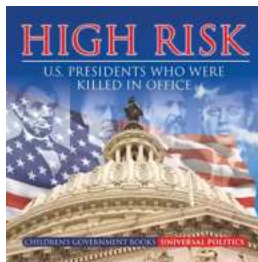

This is a story of family, change, and what we can learn from others if we just stop and listen. The protagonist, Joey, has a spirit animal, the sloth. Why the sloth? In the author's words, Sloths go real slow. And if you go real slow-slow way down, you understand things.
